The real conqueror of Kut-el-Amara, the vetern Field Marshal Baron von der Goltz, did not live to see his triumph, expiring at Bagdad a few days ago from typhus. His organization of the Turkish army put an end to Britsh hopes of an easy conquest of the rich prize of Mesopotamia, and saved the Kniser, for the present at least, his cherished Bagdad railway.

Gen Townshend probably was drivn to surrender to avoid starvation of his force. A recent official Turkish communication said the position of the British at Kut-el-Amara was critical and that they were expecting to receive small supplies of food by aero-
